

WCMC Handbooks on Biodiversity Information Management

NEW

Edited by J.H. Reynolds

This eight volume series, developed for use by decision-makers, mid-career professionals, and interested parties, reviews the issues and processes involved in the management of biodiversity information to support the conservation and sustainable use of living resources. They also provide a framework for the development of national plans and strategies and for meeting reporting obligations of international programmes and conventions. The handbooks may be used as a training resource or, more generally, to support institutions and networks involved in building capacity in information management.

Representing three-years work, this publication has been supported by the European Union, United Nations Environment Programme, European Environment Agency and through the United Kingdom's Darwin Initiative for the Survival of Species. The handbooks have been published through the generous support of the Commonwealth Secretariat and are the net result of input by individuals and institutions around the world.

Overall, the handbook series comprises:
